

Fabric protects equipment on Army's new giant dredge

Left: Newest, largest, fastest sea-going hopper dredge on Great Lakes. With three times the capacity of any other, it can dredge to 43½-foot depth.

Above: U. S. Markham's aft emergency station—emergency steering, magnetic and gyro compasses protected by fitted covers of Wellington Sears duck.

With the opening of the Saint Lawrence Seaway, new deep-draft vessels servicing Great Lakes shippers created a demand for increased harbor depths. The U. S. Army Corps of Engineers added the U. S. Markham to the fleet of hopper dredges maintaining the harbors of Lakes Erie and Ontario.

Wellington Sears cotton ducks were the choice of The Foster Company of New Orleans for fabricating covers to protect the deck equipment and small boats of this ultramodern vessel. Specially treated for water-tightness and mildew-resistance, they safeguard vital equipment against the severest effects of weather.

In both synthetics and cottons, Wellington Sears has a long and varied history of engineering industrial fabrics to specific jobs. Why not take advantage of this experience? Write for technical assistance—and our free illustrated booklet, "Protective Cover Fabrics," Dept. A-10.

A NEW REVOLUTION

Nearly two centuries ago, the daring and vision of South Carolinians like Francis Marion, the "Swamp Fox", helped blaze America's independence trail. Today, new men of destiny like those of South Carolina Electric & Gas Company are the guidon for another challenge in their state—a kind of industrial revolution. The heroics of these men lie in their courage and skill in figuring and providing the electrical needs of half the state's 46 counties. They have blazed a good trail, because in their wake industry has come in great numbers, bearing confidence in SCEGCO's ability to provide an abundance of low-cost electrical energy. Natural gas is also available in most industrial areas.
